1984-85 Theatre Season

Five plays, including a world premiere by a New York playwright formerly of Indianapolis, and a religious musical with book, music, and lyrics written by local talents will be included in the 1984-85 theatre season at ICU.

The White House, "a presidential entertainment," which seems especially appropriate this year, will open on Friday, September 28, at 8:00 p.m. in Ransburg Auditorium. The production will continue September 29, 30 and October 6 and 7.

In November an original dramatization of Thomas Wolfe's autobiographical novel, You Can't Go Home Again, will have its world premiere here. The play has been written by ICU alumnus Gayle Stahlhuth, a successful playwright and actress living in New York City. Dates are November 9, 10, 11, 16, 17 and 18.

The Good News!, another world premiere being written by several who were involved in ICU's production of Cotton Patch Gospel, will premiere on campus February 8, 9, 10, 15, 16 and 17, then tour Indiana churches as a part of the Ministry Through Drama program.

The annual dinner theatre will be Ayn Rand's popular courtroom drama, The Night of January 16th. The jury for this comedy-drama will be selected from the audience prior to each performance and will sit in the "jury box" during the performance. At the end of the murder trial, they will retire to the "jury room" to decide on a verdict of guilty or not guilty. Dates are March 15, 16, 22, 23 and 24.

During Commencement Week in May (15, 16, 17) the Theatre Department, in cooperation with the ICU Music Department, will present a musical comedy that will be announced at a later date.

Due to a new administrative policy, this will be the only announcement of the theatrical season sent to alumni this year. Please keep this announcement handy. □
