Alumni celebrate Homecoming '89

Football victory, comedy, reunions, barbecue combine for a festive week

It's always great to win the Homecoming football game, and quarterback Jeff Mitchell (left) did his part, leading the Hounds to victory over the Northwood Norsemen, 28-14. But Homecoming was much more than the football game. Rising comic star Claire Berger prefaced her concert with a comedy workshop; her appearance at U of I earned mention on the front page of the day's Indianapolis Star entertainment section.

Student events were scheduled for each night of the week of September 18-24, though most alumni began showing up in force on Saturday morning. The day's highlights included a number of special departmental breakfasts, art gallery exhibit, the annual Fellows Luncheon featuring several songs by Terri (Stucker) Coats '78, class reunions of the classes of 1975 and 1980, and a post-game barbecue for alumni, students, staff, and faculty.

Homecoming just keeps on getting better! Make plans to be at your alma mater for the 1990 festivities!
Remembering the presidents—all six of them

by Sylvia Henricks

"I may be the only living person," Julia Wolfe ventured, "who has known all of the presidents of the college." Mrs. Wolfe’s father, I.J. Good, is numbered among those who have guided the University of Indianapolis since it opened its doors in 1905.

The Reverend John T. Roberts was the first president, chosen by the trustees of the United Brethren school incorporated in 1902. "I was just a small child," she said, "but I remember President Roberts. After he was no longer president, he continued to live in the Heights, gardening and serving as a handyman. I recall seeing him pushing his wheelbarrow along the street." After President Roberts retired in 1908, the school operated for a year without a president until Lewis D. Bonebrake was inaugurated, serving until 1915.

“My father was the school business manager,” Mrs. Wolfe continued. “The committee asked him to be president, but only after they had looked everywhere for someone they felt would be better qualified. But they could find no one who wanted the job.” I.J. Good was inaugurated in 1915. He saw the college through years of growth and, during the Depression and World War II, periods of bare survival.

I. J. Good’s presidency was followed by that of I. Lynd Esch (1905-1926) and Gene E. Sease (1907-1908). G. Benjamin Lantz Jr. assumed the duties of president on July 1, 1908.

Julia Wolfe (San Diego, California), her sister Ida Mae Miller (Plainfield, Indiana) and their sister-in-law Elsie Good (Mrs. Lowell Good, Somerville, New Jersey), were on campus for the 1989 Alumni Weekend. All are graduates of the University of Indianapolis, formerly Indiana Central College.

Julia, dark-haired and soft-spoken, recounted her father’s early years on campus. “He enrolled in the first class in September 1905. A native of Marion, Indiana, he had completed his first year at Otterbein, and transferred here because it was closer to home and in his own church conference.”

Graduating in June 1906, one of only two graduates in the university’s first year, he was hired as college business manager. On September 2, 1908, he and Mabel Rivir were married. “I was born in the first house that my father built in the Heights,” Julia said. “His father and brothers came down from Marion and helped build it. Lowell, our brother, was born in the second house Father built, and Ida Mae in the third one. I can remember,” Julia added, “when there were only six houses in the Heights.”

Julia recalled her first school, a three-room building that preceded the brick Perry Township School No. 4, long a landmark on the north side of Hanna Avenue near Otterbein. (The site is now a parking lot.) "Hanna Avenue was just a gravel road then," she said, "known as Stop 4, after the interurban route that went down Shelby Street.

“The third, fourth and fifth grades were in one room. It was so crowded the fifth grade met in a room in the Ad Building.” Then the only building on campus, the Administration Building held classrooms, offices, library, dormitory space, kitchen, and the dining room where "the Club" ate—those students who lived, but did not board, in the Heights. Julia’s grade school classes met on the university campus for two years, until the new grade school was built.

“I took music lessons in the Ad Building, too,” Julia remembered. The school—and the teachers—were always in financial need,” she said. Ida Mae, who a few years later also took music lessons, remembered the cost as 50 cents for a half-hour lesson.

Julia attended high school on campus, too. “I was in the last Academy class to graduate, in 1926,” she said. "There were five of us. We had our picture in the Oracle." The Indiana Central Academy was an accredited high school offering college preparatory courses to the community.

Julia graduated from IC in 1930 with a degree in English and music, her major in piano. She then earned a bachelor’s in music. In 1932 she received a master of arts at IU with a major in piano and composition. “I used to practice five hours a day," she recalled. "Then I came back and taught part-time at the college for whatever they could pay. They couldn’t afford full-time teachers.”

Mrs. Wolfe was also pianist in musical groups and accompanist for the choirs, glee clubs and soloists. In 1934 she married Ranald Wolfe, a 1929 IC graduate. “I taught part-time through
In 1938, I stopped teaching before my second son was born, and didn’t resume until 1948."

Julia Wolfe taught in public schools in Ohio, New Jersey, and Iowa, retiring in 1975. Her husband’s career as a clinical psychologist for the Army and veterans’ hospitals took the family to Taiwan and Japan from 1962 to 1964. In Tokyo Julia taught conversational English to students at Toho-Gakuen, a famous music school. Ranald died in 1971. Their children are Ramon, Douglas, Donna, Judith, and Robert. Julia has 12 grandchildren.

Ida Mae Miller’s career differed from her sister’s, although she, too, has been a musician. “I began music lessons at the age of five, from teachers at the college, and continued summers and after school,” she said. “When I was 10, my father decided I should have art lessons, too, so I took general handcrafts in the morning, watercolor in the afternoon. At that early age I was attending classes with college students.”

With little hope of attaining Julia’s skills at the piano, Ida Mae said, she took up the violin in 1929. While attending high school she played viola in the school orchestra. “Then I was asked to play with an Indiana Central string quartet. We played at different places, sometimes high school commencements. As a junior in high school I started taking voice lessons at the college from Esther Beck, and studied with her from 1933 to 1952.”

Ida Mae graduated from Indiana Central in 1939, and “posted,” she said, two years to earn a social science and home economics degree. “I taught two years in the Indianapolis schools and was in the Army (Women’s Army Corps) for two and a half years.” She was stationed at Presque Isle, Maine, where she “got started in library work,” in London, England, and Cincinnati, Ohio. “Taking advantage of the GI Bill, I was in three schools at one time—Indiana Central, Jordan College of Music and Indiana University Extension.”

After earning a library degree from Columbia University, Ida Mae worked for the Indianapolis Public Library. In 1950 she married Butler graduate John “Jack” Miller. “And here are my two attendants,” she said with a smile, indicating her sister and sister-in-law. In June 1952, she earned another bachelor’s in music at Jordan.

Mrs. Miller returned to work at the Plainfield Public Library in 1966, and from 1973 to 1981 at the Indiana Historical Society Library. She and her husband, an accountant who retired from Allison’s in 1980, have four children: Susan, Julia, David, and Carl, and four grandchildren.

Lowell Good’s interests lay in mechanics and radio. As had Julia, he attended the Indiana Central Academy, but took his fourth year at Manual High School. He graduated from IC in 1931 with a BA and earned a second degree, a BS, in 1932. He received his master’s in physics at IU. He and Elsie Beck were married in 1939. Lowell taught school for several years, then worked for 37 years at RCA in Indianapolis and in Camden, Somerville, and Princeton, New Jersey. Lowell died in 1980. Mrs. Good has two daughters and three grandchildren.

As they spoke of their father, who died in 1946, Julia and Ida Mae recalled his dedication to Christian education. “He was convinced the church needed to provide education for ministers and the teaching profession,” Julia said. They remembered with pride his vision for the future of the school, which encouraged him to persist in the purchase of land north of Hanna Avenue to enlarge the original eight-acre tract. He organized the College Improvement Association, which bought the land, planted trees and shrubs, and sponsored clean-up days on campus.

“He was always an optimist,” Ida Mae said, “raising money in the face of great odds, he still had faith in the future.” “Perhaps most significant,” Julia said, “he kept the school going through hard times. Nobody else could have been so devoted, could have so believed in its future.”

Sticks to your ribs—Dining hall dynamo Ted Polk served barbecued ribs and burgers at the post-game barbecue, making for a very full day. He started with a half-dozen alumni breakfasts, catered the Fellows Luncheon and the post-game barbecue, and fed the students their three regular meals of the day. What, Ted, no midnight breakfast?
