Idalion archaeological field school helps discover lost ‘temple of Apollo’

Two professors and three students from the University of Indianapolis, excavating this summer in the ancient city of Idalion, Cyprus, helped unearth and identify the long-lost “temple of Apollo,” which scientists have been seeking for more than a hundred years.

The discovery took place during the five-week expedition sponsored in part by the University of Indianapolis under the auspices of a University of Arizona excavation field school. A group from New York’s Brooklyn College also participated.

The 8th-century B.C. city of Idalion is located near the town of Dhalia, 15 miles southwest of Nicosia.

Dr. Philip Young, director of U of I’s Krannert Memorial Library, was digging the five-meter-square trench that unearthed the first evidence that the site was indeed the long-sought ancient temple. Young holds a Ph.D. in classical archeology from the University of Pennsylvania, and has participated in excavations worldwide.

The temple was first discovered in 1860 by R.H. Lang, then the British consul in Cyprus. During the ensuing years, however, Lang’s site had been covered over and lost to archaeologists.

Dr. Phil Young (center), library director at the University of Indianapolis, and his wife, Nancy (front), on the dig at Idalion, Cyprus.

However, Lang had published a plan of his early findings, and thanks in part to the discovery this summer of a set of stone steps that matched steps in Lang’s sketch, the 1992 team was led to the site of the lost temple.

Young said work came to a temporary halt when the group was assured they were at the Apollo sanctuary. “There was lots of shouting and arm-waving and general excitement,” he said. About 30 participants were involved in the daily excavations.

Adjunct history professor Bonny Bazemore, digging in a trench next to Young, discovered floors and walls that should provide scientists with a history of the use of the temple. Bazemore is currently teaching at Intercollege in Nicosia, which has shared affiliated programs with the University of Indianapolis since 1981.

Young says the Idalion field school may extend its research for several successive summers as excavations continue at the site. Bazemore, who is conducting research on the ancient languages and inscriptions of the island, will continue to be involved as well.

Dates for next summer’s field school will be announced soon, according to Young. It will again be open to the public and should be of special appeal to participants with an interest in history, art history, anthropology, or the classics.

For information, call Dr. Young at (317) 788-3399.

The Myth of Adonis & Aphrodite

The discovery of the temple has shed new light on the popular myth of Aphrodite and Adonis, whose love story was set into poetry in Shakespeare’s famous Venus and Adonis. The Greeks had long held the belief that the goddess Aphrodite, born on the island of Cyprus, had fallen in love with her mortal lover, Adonis, in the hills near Idalion.

The ancient Greeks later came to Cyprus and found the Idalion temple, bearing the Greek name “Apollo Amyklos.” They equated this name to the Cypriot god whose name would have translated to “Adoni.” Since it was located near a sanctuary to a female deity identified with Aphrodite, they concluded they had found an explanation for the stories that had been part of their ancient culture.

According to the myth, Aphrodite was heartbroken when Adonis, a handsome young shepherd, was killed by a wild boar. Later Zeus restored Adonis to life but separated the lovers for six months each year—a story the Greeks used to explain the changing seasons, when vegetation flourished, died, then flourished again.

Alumna perseveres in recording of Faithful

Against what came to seem like great odds, Terri (Stucker) Coats '78 has completed her recording project, Faithful.

Terri, who has had a music ministry for years, decided a little more than a year ago to respond to the requests of friends and fans by making a recording. "We could have gone the Nashville route and spent $40,000, but we wondered, would it still be Terri?" she says.

Instead, Terri went to a studio near their home in Cincinnati. They were referred there by a woman Terri met while singing at a wedding; the woman ended up writing a number of the songs.

The timetable initially called for a December 1991 release, but after a series of seasonal setbacks at the studio, Terri decided to have them put the project on hold until the new year. Later, once all the songs were finally recorded, the studio transferred them to digital audio tape (DAT), but Terri's final song, a special piano-and-vocal number, was recorded directly to DAT. Unfortunately, the DAT was accidentally erased. Still, all the songs were salvageable from the 24-track—except that last song.

Terri became discouraged, and put the project back on hold. "I had a kind of crisis of faith in my ministry," she says.

Finally, the pianist was brought back in, and they undertook the song again. Terri was so disheartened that she hated the results of the session. Weeks later, the studio suggested she listen to that recording one more time. "It was flawless!" she says, still obviously surprised. The finished product made its debut in July 1992.

Howard Figler is Career Week speaker

College placement experts agree that the job market for new college graduates is deplorable; some say the worst in 30 years. Those who left college in 1992 are in head-to-head competition with 1991 graduates, not to mention the thousands of experienced folks who, for myriad reasons, are unemployed or underemployed.

If you know of vacancies in your firm, or know of colleagues, clients or others in need of a college-prepared employee, please notify U of I’s Career Planning & Placement Office, and/or suggest that your contacts do the same (317–788-3296).

A special program, CareerFest ’93, is scheduled the week of February 1. A focus of this career awareness effort will be a two-day campus visit by nationally known career development specialist Dr. Howard Figler.

Dr. Figler will speak about what’s happening in the job market and workplace today and what aspiring and seasoned professionals should do to ensure success. CareerFest will feature a variety of activities, including career software demonstrations and a career fair, designed to raise awareness of the importance of planning and of the resources available to students at U of I.

The CareerFest planning committee invites you to become involved by volunteering to be a speaker or career representative, by sponsoring or helping to finance a particular career week activity, or by providing some other service or benefit. Please call Mrs. Barbara Russell, Director for Alumni/Parent Relations, 317–788-3205, to help, or to reserve a seat at Dr. Figler’s presentation at 5:30 p.m. February 2.

Lilly grant funds sciences curriculum development

The university is one of only two local independent universities to receive funding this year in Lilly Endowment’s annual competition for curriculum and institutional development funding.

The $50,000 grant will be used for curriculum development in the sciences, according to vice president and provost Lynn Youngblood. It will introduce a four-credit science course for non-science majors into the general education curriculum.

The course will integrate the sciences with math as a whole, and concentrate on problem-solving strategies. Students will be able to apply their knowledge of the integrated structure of mathematics and the sciences beyond the separate disciplines.

“The grant will enable us to free up some very talented and creative faculty from a variety of disciplines to develop this multi-faceted course,” Youngblood said. “The result will be a keystone course that seems assured of making physical sciences more stimulating for students who may not have a natural interest in those disciplines.”

The Lilly Endowment competition is open to Indiana’s accredited independent colleges. Martin University received the other grant, designed to help develop their institutional advancement program.

WICR reached 2.5% of all men in the metro area age 18 and over, up from 1.4% (a percentage increase of 93.3%), and 1.5% of all women 18 and over (previously 1.3%).

There is more good news in specific demographics. WICR reaches 2.4% of all persons 65 and up, 7.5% of all metropolitan residents between 55 and 64, 4.1% of those 50 and over, 2.5% of those 35 and up, 2.5% of all persons between 25 and 54, 1.1% of those 25 to 49, and 1.2% of those persons between 18 and 34. Most time periods in the total survey area experienced increases in audience, some substantial.
Four inducted into Hall of Fame; I-Person named

Four distinguished alumni have been inducted into the university’s Hall of Fame: Woody McBride ’52, Dick Nalley ’77, Mickey Powell ’61, and Doreen Wright St. Clair ’61. Doug Semenick ’73 was named “I Person of the Year.”

Woody McBride, now retired, served as a Manual High School teacher and coach after his days as a basketball and baseball standout for the Hounds from 1974-77. He was an outstanding all-purpose football playoff appearance.

Dick Nalley was a football and track standout for the Greyhounds from 1958-61. Powell was the NAIA District 21 champion in 1961, adding Hoosier College Conference and Little State championships the same year. Powell was a four-time all-conference selection, helping the Greyhounds to conference titles three times.

Following his collegiate career, Powell became the first golf pro at Otter Creek in Columbus in 1964. He built, developed, and owns the Golf Club of Indiana. The former Indianapolis football standout is a faculty member at the University of Indianapolis Alumni Varsity Club “I Person of the Year,” Powell served as president of the PGA in 1985 and 1986, was inducted into the Indiana Golf Hall of Fame in 1986, and received the University of Indianapolis Distinguished Alumnus award in 1987.

A noted teacher, 19 of Powell’s former assistant professionals have since attained head professional status. Mickey and his wife, Diana, have five children.

Doreen Wright St. Clair was a standout all-around athlete at the university from 1958-61. During her career, basketball was the only women’s intercollegiate sport, and St. Clair earned three letters. After teaching at Whiteland High School for two years, she returned to the Indianapolis campus to teach and coach. From 1963 to 1967, she coached Indianapolis teams in basketball, field hockey, softball, track and volleyball.

Following her teaching career at Indianapolis, St. Clair went to Franklin College, where she has taught for 25 years. St. Clair’s teams in men’s and women’s tennis and volleyball posted outstanding records, advancing to national championships three times in women’s tennis. Doreen and her husband, Hager, have two children.

Doug Semenick is the recipient of the University of Indianapolis Alumni Varsity Club “I Person of the Year” Award. The award is given based on community service. Semenick is a nationally recognized authority on strength training who has written and lectured on strength training and fitness. The former Indianapolis football standout is a faculty member at the University of Louisville.
School of Business accredited by Association of Collegiate Business Schools and Programs

The School of Business at the University of Indianapolis is one of 17 baccalaureate programs nationally to gain accreditation from the Association of Collegiate Business Schools and Programs (ACBSP). The accreditation vote took place June 22 at the annual convention of the ACBSP.

"We are extremely pleased that our business programs have met the high standards of excellence prescribed by this accrediting agency," said Dr. Robin Livesay, dean of the School of Business.

Waltman at the helm: Can the Greyhounds return to basketball glory?

A new era in University of Indianapolis men's basketball begins with the addition of new Coach Royce Waltman. The new Greyhound mentor shared his excitement and optimism for the future of the U of I basketball program at the Crimson & Grey Day Hall of Fame Luncheon September 12.

Waltman told the alumni in attendance that he isn't starting a new tradition, but working to return Greyhound basketball to the national prominence it enjoyed under legendary Coach Angus Nicoson. Waltman encourages alumni to stop by the men's basketball office when they are on campus and to call the men's basketball staff to recommend a prospective student-athlete.

Because the Greyhounds open the season with nine straight road games, Waltman encourages alumni to attend the annual Coca-Cola Peach Basket Classic at Marian College November 30 and December 2. The Greyhounds will face host Marian at 8 p.m. Monday, November 30, with the consolation and championship games at 6 and 8 p.m. Wednesday, December 2. Tickets for the tournament are $4 for both sessions or $2.50 per session.

Waltman will welcome four returning starters and 13 returning lettermen from last season's 9-19 squad. Senior MVP Doug Stahly and senior two-time GLVC All-Academic Team member Todd Lammert will be the leaders for the Hounds. The 6'8 Stahly averaged a career-best 11.2 points and 4.8 rebounds per game last season, his third year in the starting lineup.

Talented swingman Shannon Arthur leads a strong junior class with seven returning players. Arthur led the team in scoring (13.5), rebounding (5.1), assists (3.4), steals (1.3), and free throws made (58) and attempted (98) last season, despite missing six games. At 6'8, pivotman Mike DeHaven averaged 9.8 points and 4.4 rebounds per game, hitting 58% from the field and 79% at the line. A 6'6 forward, Jim Mosher ended strong late last season, finishing with 54% accuracy from the field. Junior center Kent Andrews looks to contribute inside.

Junior guards Scott Falkner, Stacy Fields and Tim Haynes saw plenty of action last season. Fields and Haynes usually started for the Greyhounds, while Falkner provided instant offense off the bench. All three players averaged five points per game.

Sophomores Tom Gohmann, Greg Sago, and Chad Mills made immediate contributions as rookies last season. The 6'5 Gohmann showed a nice shooting touch with 55% accuracy from the field. The 6'0 Sago started 18 games at point guard, adding 49% field goal marksmanship, and the 6'0 Mills provided good ball-handling and 92% free throw shooting. Sophomore Shane Steimel should contribute after battling injuries a year ago.

Waltman has added an impressive recruiting class to his experienced returnees: 6'7 Mike Brooks of Indianapolis Ben Davis, 5'11 speedster Noi Clay of Northfield and athletic 6'0 Perrell Lucas of McCutcheon. Brooks keyed Ben Davis' run to the Elite Eight, including an upset of top-ranked Anderson in the Sweet 16. Clay and Lucas competed in the "Hoosier Basketball Top 40 Workout," and Clay was selected to participate in the Showcase Shootout three-point contest at the Indiana-Kentucky All-Star Game.

The new Greyhounds face a rugged schedule that includes nine straight road games opening the season and 18 games in the Great Lakes Valley Conference, the premier league in NCAA II, according to Basketball Times. Waltman is optimistic that despite the tough schedule, the Hounds can return to their winning ways.

For a copy of the Greyhound athletic schedule, write to the Athletic Office or call (317) 788-3246.

What a great week! October 5–10 was a combination Homecoming and Birthday Celebration for the University of Indianapolis, and we've never had a week quite like it. Far left: A member of the Indiana Wheelmen Association demonstrates one of 20 bikes of turn-of-the-century vintage at Thursday's 1902 carnival. The huge birthday cake in the next picture was a centerpiece of Monday's huge celebration at the Indianapolis Children's Museum for new friends and major donors. Below the cake photo: A student foursome takes to the floor, dancing to period music at the carnival in Nicoson Hall. Below the dancers, magician/comedian Carl Andrews Jr. entertains with a card trick at Saturday's picnic. To the left of the photo of Carl: Face painting is always a kid-pleaser, as was again the case at the carnival. On this page, in the photo below this box: Some of the 132 international students from 35 countries gather on Friday in the flag-draped foyer of Krannert Memorial Library for the annual Celebration of the Flags. To the right of the flags: Vicki Sweeney, president of the Indianapolis Student Government, is one of several students who donned period clothing during Birthday Week. Here, Yicky helps a child with his bear at the Teddy Bear Tea Party. Below the flags: Student Kris Angle (left) greets a guest and offers a printed program at the Children's Museum festivities. Bottom right: Dr. Fred Hill (right) did the research for this giant time-line display of the university's history (Children's Museum employees Karen Karg '86 and Joy Johnson '80 spent many donated hours creating the display). Finally, at right: The university commissioned a special three-color poster in honor of the birthday. The university's various names (matching in number the years that name existed) may be read over a detail from a Good Hall pillar, with 'Celebrating 90 Years' in the center. A few posters remain at $10 each; you may order one by calling (317) 788-3298. Photos: R Brent Smith, Robin Jesstad.

Letter to the Editor

Family ties to university reach back prior to founding

Dear Editor,

The transfer of Angela Marie Hawley from Ball State University to the University of Indianapolis last year marked the continuation of a sixth-generation relationship with U of I. Thus when we, her grandparents, came to visit her, it brought a flood of memories. For all of us old-timers it is easy to follow memories’ leading and recall the past. Please permit me to return for a bit:

On September 19, 1885, in the home of Reverend Simon Walls (Angela’s great-great-great grandfather), three other United Brethren ministers met with him and Bishop Kephart to draft a resolution: “It resolved that the Indiana Conference of the United Brethren in Christ Church consider the building of a college seminary for the training of preachers, who will fill our pulpits . . . .” This resolution was presented to, and adopted by, the next session of the Indiana Conference at Palmyra, Indiana, in 1886.

When Indiana Central University became a reality, Simon Walls’ son, Jacob H. Walls, a presiding elder or district superintendent of the Conference, was a member of the University board of trustees. Seeing the potential of the new school, he, along with other preach- ers, began to persuade promising young people to attend Indiana Central. Loren S. Noblitt of Bartholomew County, near Columbus, Indiana, was one of those recruited by Reverend Walls. So was Minnie Walls, Jacob Walls’ own daughter. Thus, Loren S. Noblitt and Minnie Walls met, fell in love and were married on the campus of Indiana Central, probably the first on-campus marriage for the school.

Loren S. and Minnie Walls Noblitt left Indianapolis to attend Moody Bible Institute and then went to New Jersey, where they continued their educational activities for the next 15 years. In 1972, they returned to Indiana Central as professors; he in math and science, and she in English and languages. They remained until 1987, when they moved back to Columbus. He retired from teaching at the high school in 1984. Today, at age 103, he is one of the oldest former students of U of I.

It was the years 1927 to 1937 that I (Angela’s grandfather) remember. Though I was only three when we returned, I do have some distinct memories. There was only one class building. It was called the Ad (short for Administration) Building. Now it is called Good Hall. There were two men’s dormitories and two women’s dorms. There was also a little “cracker box” gymnasium east of the Ad Building. The baseball diamond was where Esch Hall is, and the football field was where the library is now located. I was very impressed with the huge pillars of the Ad Building, and how quiet I had to be when walking down the halls inside. I loved the broad, double stairs to the second floor, and the long, steep stairs to the third-floor music practice rooms. I especially liked the base- ment, where the post office and bookstore were located. There were lots of storerooms and janitor supply rooms, as well as the furnace room. Dad had a room where he worked on his telescope lenses. It was dark and spooky and fun to play in the basement halls at night.

As the years passed, our interests changed. Instead of just childhood play, we were interested in college activities: ball games, plays, recitals. Social events such as High School Day, Homecoming, and May Day were great times—especially High School Day and Homecoming. Perhaps the food was part of the reason. These were Depression years, when money was scarce. The meals were served outside, near the gym. I recall those big kettles of beans cooking for hours and whetting our growing appetites by the aroma. Memory has, perhaps, made the taste buds sharper!

These were the years when we kids had our college hero worship in full swing. Those hard-working athletes, who were able to notice us kids, no matter how tired they were, deserve a special reward. For years I treasured a baseball bat, broken by Johnny Simons during a game. He had taped the handle so it would not pinch my fingers. Sometimes he even called us by name. What a thrill! Some of the names that come to mind: Ray Crowe, Red Dorton, Bob Collier, Dave DeGernet, Bill Shafer—the list could go on.

But enough of childhood memories. Our association with U of I continued even after we moved to Columbus. I still came to the college on special occasions. We still followed the progress of the college athletic teams. And all the time, we were growing up. We finished our schooling; the war come along; and we served our country. When the war was over, we came home to a changed world. We were older and more worldly wise, perhaps. We came back to Indiana Central.

How time had changed things! Oh, the campus was much the same. The grounds, the buildings, the beautiful trees were still there. But we were different. We were adults and we found that memory had distorted the facts. It was up to us to adjust to the changes. And life went on.

Like my parents before me, I met and married my wife, Lucille Valentine, while we were students at Indiana Central College. We continued our careers as teachers and principals over the next 39 years, retiring in 1989. Like my great-grandfather, grandfather, and father before me, I continue to serve as a Methodist pastor.

Our daughters, Charlene Noblitt Hawley Rockhold, graduated from ICG in 1969. Our younger daughter, Kelly Noblitt Miller, took some classes there before she graduated from Purdue. And now Charlene’s daughter (our granddaughter) is a student at the University of Indianapolis.

Our family has been linked with U of I for six generations. How many attended there? My mother and father; all three of their children; our two daughters and granddaughter; my brother Loren’s daughter, Kathy Jo Noblitt Collins; and several nieces and nephews, too numerous to mention.

And so it continues: the dream of Simon Walls and other ministers of establishing a college/seminary has come true. While other schools have failed, the University of Indianapolis continues strong and true to its purpose: educating our youth. Some will become ministers, some will choose other fields of endeavor. But all of us can carry the banner of our school proudly.

Some people may say that the purpose of the school has changed, but it hasn’t, not really. It is just adapting to the world of today. Let’s keep its standards high. Tradition is not just for looking back at the past. It’s for looking to the future, too.

Sincerely, Charles Robert Noblitt ’50
