CRABS

C.R.

"Few are those qualified to judge the meanings of the messages that are written by the crab. This little motto has in it a wonderful philosophy. A particularly bad fault of the majority of college students is that they see everything and everybody. When something goes against their liking, they are ready to maliciously tear down everyone. It is great to wake up late; everyone has the same fault.

Little regard have they for the goodness in their fellows; they see only the shortcomings. A little application of the meaning to the crab would be very beneficial to them, but they are not in the running for an application of the meaning of the crab.

The motto is only another way of saying what has been said time and time again. It is a very good motto. There's the old saying, "Clean out your own dooryard before you start to clean your neighbor's yard." Another way of saying it is, "First take care of your own eye, and then you will be fit to take the mote out of your brother's eye, or "First, clean up your own house, and don't judge others." All of them mean the same thing, however. It is the principle of judging others as we judge ourselves. We have no chance and a square deal. How few of us are so good that there is no sin in us, and how many of us judge others as we are judged.

There is the old saying, "There's so much need in the best of us, and so much goodness in the worst of us, that it doesn't behove any of us to talk about the sin of others."

What if our brother has fallen away a little bit? May it not be true that, if we judge ourselves, we may be a bit more grace as much as he and even more? Why is man so prone to solve over- looking the shortcomings of others? They are the very qualities that may be raised up after carefully studying the motto in its real meaning. If every man could see things as the Almighty would have us see them, there would not be much need for the saying. How fitting is Burns' little observation, "I said some poesy the Gibbs gle er, To see ourselves as others see us."

I read with much interest from your pulpit and from the pulpit of God. And foolish notion.

If we could always see ourselves as others see us, before we passed an opinion on other folks, there would be fewer opinions passed. "Few are those qualified to judge the shortcomings of their fellows."
